SAP2000 Category:Structural engineering Category:Structural analysis softwareActivation of central 5-HT1A receptor in induced panic by (+/-)pindolol, but not its antagonist, NAN-190. The 5-HT1A receptor antagonist, (R)-N-[3-[[2-(2-methoxyphenoxy)ethyl]amino]-2-pyrrolidiny]-N-cyclohexyl-N-phenyl ethylamine (NAN-190) (1 microgram) and (+/-)pindolol (20 micrograms), respectively, were injected into the lateral ventricle (ICV) of rats (300-800 ng per site) 60 min before a series of tests: 10 min swimming in 4 degrees C water (to induce in vivo anxiety), 10 min in a new environment (novelty-induced anxiety), or 15 min in a light-dark environment (light-dark-induced anxiety). Both drugs attenuated the characteristic effects of pindolol: reduction of blood pressure, body temperature, and electroencephalographic and electromyographic activities, and increase of spontaneous motor activity. None of the rats treated with NAN-190 displayed an attack of in vivo panic attacks. These data suggest that clozapine-like profile of (+/-)pindolol is mediated by 5-HT1A receptor.Q: How can I duplicate or clone a DIV element in CSS? I have used the cloning method and used the z-index approach to essentially clone a div element in CSS. In other words, I move my element so it is on top of the first one. I use negative z-index values. This works, but it only works for a single element. My problem is that I have a div (parent) which has several children (children). The children are duplicated using a cloning method using insertBefore. I basically want the entire element to slide up and then down again and again as the user scrolls down. Is this possible? Could I use any other approach? Thanks! A: You can use CSS3 Transitions to accomplish this. You can also use the jQuery Transit plugin.
